My Dear Friend

240

I meant to have written at an earlier date & then I should be sure that this would find you in Paris. As it is, you may be just setting off for England, as I see in some of the new papers that you are coming over to a Temperance Meeting.

But as I am not quite sure what your address will be in England, or how long you may stay here, I think it best

To write to Paris to ask that you will have the kind ness to allow me to return to Boston under your care.

I learned from Frank in London that you & Mr. Villard had secured your passages by the Java, sailing on the 26 of October & I have written & secured my berth in the same. If you have made any change of plan pray let me know at once.

It has occurred to me that perhaps you & Henry might be going to make our friend Webb a visit, & so embark from Queenstown, but I should not be afraid to go from Liverpool to Queens town alone. Besides, there is no doubt that my Liverpool friends would look up some Bolton people to take charge of me as far as Queens town, where I should meet you.

I am not an interesting travelling companion at sea, but I am not a troublesome one. May write as soon as you believe this or if you are coming ^{directly} ~~at that~~ to England, please come at once to Richmond & see us. If you can't send a line in advance we should be sure to be at home. I have been so engaged

There I have had time to write to no one. Anne Chap man has married on the 14th. Tho' it was a very quiet wedding to which only relations were asked, there was a great deal to occupy every moment of time, & I was obliged to neglect every thing besides.
I wanted to write to you after the breakfast congratulating you that it had all gone off so well, & I was extremely sorry to lose you in London. But on our voyage we shall have plenty of time (I perhaps stretch) for talking. I have your news from Weymouth every week, & a long letter from P. during a few days since. Give my love to Frank & kind regards to Frank & M.
Villar, & believe me affec. devotedly Anne Weston.
